

The book was found

Running With The Kenyans: Passion, Adventure, And The Secrets Of The Fastest People On Earth

Synopsis

"A dusty road stretches into the distance like a pencil line across the arid landscape. Lions, rhino, and buffalo roam the plains on either side. But I haven't come to Kenya to spot wildlife. I've come to run." Whether running is your recreation, your religion, or just a spectator sport, Adharanand Finn's incredible journey to the elite training camps of Kenya will captivate and inspire you. Part travelogue, part memoir, this mesmerizing quest to uncover the secrets of the world's greatest runners - and put them to the test - combines practical advice, a fresh look at barefoot running, and hard-won spiritual insights. As a boy growing up in the English countryside, Adharanand Finn was a natural runner. While other kids struggled, he breezed through schoolyard races, imagining he was one of his heroes: the Kenyan long-distance runners exploding into prominence as Olympic and world champions. But as he grew up, pursued a career in journalism, married and had children, those childhood dreams slipped away - until suddenly, in his mid-thirties, Finn realized he might have only one chance left to see how far his talents could take him. Uprooting his family of five, including three small children, Finn traveled to Iten, a small, chaotic town in the Rift Valley province of Kenya - a mecca for long-distance runners thanks to its high altitude, endless running paths, and some of the top training schools in the world. Finn would run side by side with Olympic champions, young hopefuls, and barefoot schoolchildren... not to mention the exotic - and sometimes dangerous - wildlife for which Kenya is famous. Here, too, he would meet a cast of colorful characters, including his unflappable guide, Godfrey Kiprotich, a former half marathon champion; Christopher Cheboiboch, one of the fastest men ever to run the New York City Marathon; and Japhet, a poor, bucktoothed boy with unsuspected reservoirs of courage and raw speed. Amid the daily challenges of training and of raising a family abroad, Finn would learn invaluable lessons about running - and about life.

Book Information

Audible Audio Edition

Listening Length: 8 hours 7 minutes

Program Type: Audiobook

Version: Unabridged

Publisher: Random House Audio

Audible.com Release Date: May 15, 2012

Language: English

ASIN: B0083EG9SW

Best Sellers Rank: #13 in Books > Travel > Africa > Kenya #88 in Books > Sports & Outdoors > Miscellaneous > Sociology of Sports #120 in Books > Audible Audiobooks > Nonfiction > Travel

Customer Reviews

Fantastic book, easy read. More than 50% of my life I've been a runner. I'm a white Caucasian male who is trying to always get better and I look up to East Africans in the sport of running because, quite frankly, they're the best. I'm always curious to know what kind of training they do differently, or what kind of food helps them. Obviously I'm aware that genetics plays a large role and no ONE THING will make me into a superstar outside of more training. But, I like learning about new cultures and seeing how I can implement changes into my running regiment using Kenyan tradition! This book is a fantastic read because it's a story about the authors journey to Kenya to uncover secrets about Kenyan success. What you find is that there are like 10+ "secrets" that, when all put together, lead to Kenyan success. Not ONE thing like going barefoot, being at altitude, etc.

This is a journalist's account of contemporary running culture in Kenya. And so it is in the unmistakable, or I might say inevitable, style of a reporter. It's readable - I've often read books in a less agreeable style. A lot of it is anecdotal journalistic free association rather than analytical observation. Yet, in spite of a pretty good effort I think he still misses or at least underappreciates some aspects of what he experiences, although the observations are appreciated. And it certainly does take more determination than I would likely gather to uproot a small family, leave a job and move to Kenya to study the runners there. Would that there could be a similar book about the Tarahumara, which is doubtful. What he comes away with is a series of factors that logically seem to lead to the Kalenjin Kenyans' domination of distance running worldwide today. It's just that somehow you come away with the feeling that something is missing, that it doesn't all really quite add up. The running barefoot as children, training at high altitude, diet, and the motivation to get out of poverty -- are all significant...yet you don't come away with the feeling that all the pieces are there, or maybe they just don't fit together into a coherent whole. One point in particular he fails to mention: with the debate over whether distance running causes heart scarring or not, it would be especially interesting to hear if the Kenyans have experienced this problem or not. I've never heard of one of their runners having any such thing. I think that something not fully acknowledged is that Westerners have become so distanced from nature they have no comprehension of life in a tribal culture. For those who look, there are certain common features of any true tribal society. They all start with the assumption that nothing is given. You must work hard, very hard, for survival. So you see the brutal training given to young Apache runners, described in my book, the vision quests and sun dances of north American plains tribes, the pueblo kiva initiation ceremonies, and the Kalenjin circumcision ceremony. You had indeed better be focused if you aim to survive such ordeals. And once a young person survives such an initiation they are much less fearful or reluctant to give everything to any endeavor. For example, after the Masai kill a lion with a short sword in order to become a warrior, do you think they would be too concerned about competing in a race?

Adharanand Finn's Running With The Kenyans stands as part personal odyssey, part Kenyan running exploration. On the surface Finn sets out with two primary goals in mind: first, he wants to find himself as runner, person, and writer, and second he wants to tap the Kenyan well in an effort to figure out what makes the country so dominant in distance running. In order to achieve both goals, Finn uproots his family, complete with small children and moves to Kenya to train for a marathon. With these two central themes, at times the book can inspire, at others it can meander along lacking direction as he searches for to find the answer to questions that border on rhetorical. As a runner, Finn is not world class, at least at the texts start, and regardless of his end stage fitness, he will never be elite. That said, he wants to live the dream, to run free as he calls it, "to live among people who don't think that running is ridiculous" (Finn 45). In Iten, Kenya, the town he relocates to, people do not run for fitness "they are not dog walkers, they have to work too hard just to stay alive" "here people run to be athletes, to seek a way out and to find a future. In Iten, a hotbed of Kenyan running, the home to the famous Brother Colm who started it all, people run because to run, they have a chance. Thus their training comes with "the hunger to succeed" (237). Finn explores this world, stumbling into record holders both current past at nearly every step. As he works toward his personal running goal, running his first marathon, he befriends locals, attends races, and visits training camps. Finn creates a running team with the goal of not only completing, but also promoting a few dreamers. Along his journey, he casually shows up to a morning run, one conducted at 5:30 am, to find the current Marathon World Record holder, Wilson Kipsang, giving directions for a fartlek workout. Success and greatness is so abound, that when Finn attempts to contact Kipsang, a 2:03 marathoner, he phones the wrong Kipsang, only this one has a 2:05 personal best. The running greatness becomes his focus, and much of the text tries to find the secret, one in the end has a complex and convoluted answer, a response deeply rooted and spread across the culture of the area. Finn's marathon rests at the text's culmination, standing as the final event beyond the afterword. While this path is interesting, the nuts and bolts rests in the sections highlighted above. Finn wants to know why we run. Why do people punish themselves? At times he follows the lead of Born to Run for he himself had converted to forefoot style to avert injury and mimic barefoot Kenyans, and he longs to know what running means. Throughout the narrative journey, he digs, ponders, and tries to find the answer: "Perhaps it is to fulfill this primal urge that runners and joggers get up every morning and pound the streets in cities all over the world" (195). He went to Kenya to become primal, and as an avid runner I can claim that his journey stokes the internal fires of those constantly searching for the same facts. Favorite line: "Twenty-six miles; forty-two kilometers. But they are just numbers. One step at a time. One breath at a time" (xiv). Works Cited Finn, Adharanand. Running with the Kenyans: Passion, Adventure, and the Secrets of the Fastest People on Earth. New York: Ballantine, 2012. Check here for other reviews: [...]

Download to continue reading...

Running with the Kenyans: Passion, Adventure, and the Secrets of the Fastest People on Earth
Running with the Kenyans: Discovering the Secrets of the Fastest People on Earth
Running with the Kenyans My Running Journal: Bubble Man Running, 6 x 9, 52 Week Running Log Adventure Guide
Nicaragua (Adventure Guides Series) (Adventure Guides Series) (Adventure Guides Series)
(Adventure Guide to Nicaragua) Unsettled: Denial and Belonging Among White Kenyans (Ethnographic Studies in Subjectivity) Romans: Grace and Glory (The Passion Translation): The Passion Translation The Animal Book: A Collection of the Fastest, Fiercest, Toughest, Cleverest, Shyest and Most Surprising Animals on Earth (Boston Globe-Horn Book Honors
(Awards)) Proverbs Wisdom from Above 2016 Weekly Planner: Imitation Leather (Passion Translation) (The Passion Translation) Passion Blue (Passion Blue Duology Book 1) Passion Blue
(A Passion Blue Novel) Passion For Life (Quest Passion for Life Series, V. 1) The Voices of Hockey:
Broadcasters Reflect on the Fastest Game on Earth Running with Raven: The Amazing Story of
One Man, His Passion, and the Community He Inspired Marathon Training & Distance Running Tips: The Runner's Guide for Endurance Training and Racing, Beginner Running Programs and Advice Running Motivation and Stamina: Train Your Brain to Love Running with Self-Hypnosis,
Meditation and Affirmations PRIVATE LABEL SECRETS: The Fastest Ways to FIND and BRAND
Your Own Products and Make Way More MONEY on . RUN: What To Know About Running Before
You Begin (A Complete Beginners Guide: Learn How To Start Running And Jogging) The Campaign Manager: Running and Winning Local Elections (Campaign Manager: Running &

Winning Local Elections) Swim Speed Secrets for Swimmers and Triathletes: Master the Freestyle
Technique Used by the World's Fastest Swimmers (Swim Speed Series)

Contact Us

DMCA

Privacy

FAQ & Help