I bought this for my husband, who needed an 18-month diary. They're not easy to find! Was happy to stumble across this diary. It is organised with the week on the left-hand side of the page and blank ruled lines on the right. There are unobtrusive marks against dates for phases of the moon and daylight saving. At the front, you have your usual diary stuff: personal data, monthly summaries, holidays, timezones, etc. At the back is a handy gusset that contains a small pamphlet, a sheet of stick-on initials (to personalise the notebook, I suppose) and two sheets (one blue, one orange) of stick-on icons. I use the Japanese Muji 12-month diary, which has no moon/daylight saving icons, the same weekly layout but which gives more room for Saturday and Sunday (Moleskine divides one horizontal entry space into two) and has a grid facing page, as opposed to lined. The Muji looks more utilitarian (plain brown cardboard cover like their notebooks) and doesn't come with a back gusset or any pretty icon sheets or band to keep the diary closed but, as that's not how I use it, that doesn't bother me. I like the grid as I do a fair amount of calculating (and storing of things like website access/recovery codes!) and it helps keep all numbers/characters lined up. Also, the Muji is cheaper (for me)! I'll keep buying Moleskines as presents for hubby but am quite happy with the Muji diary for myself. (I bought the Muji at a Muji store here in Malaysia, so I don't know if you can get them elsewhere. has a Muji section but it's August, so the diaries may not be in stock yet.)
