Katharine Holabird's first Angelina Ballerina book was published in 1983. After graduating from the Francis Parker School in Chicago, Katharine attended Bennington College in Vermont. She received a B.A. in Literature from Bennington in 1969, and then worked as a literary editor at the college for a year. The following year she went to Italy, where she became a freelance journalist. In 1974, Katharine married and moved with her husband, Michael Haggiag, to London, England where she lives today with her family.

I normally enjoy Angelina Ballerina's relationship and attitude toward her friends and family. However, in this book, Angelina purposely avoids playing with her younger sister and is quite mean to her. Her behavior is not addressed and she briefly loses her sister. I purchased this book as a gift for my older daughter, but this is not the message that I wanted to give her.

They loved it !
