Synopsis

They are the last of their kind: indigenous people. In Papua until some years ago they still have been even cannibals. Peter Voss had a hard journey for days to reach the indigenous of the Southeast Asian island. There he made stunning photographs of these people, who live far away from "civilization". We can see them in scenes of their daily life, with their traditional body painting and during hunting activities. With great technical effort Peter Voss managed to take exceptional and in their perfection unique pictures of these people.

Customer Reviews

Peter Voss is an award-winning professional photographer whose other publication is Indigenous: Hidden Beauties of Africa.

I did not buy this book. I got it at public library. Get majority of my books there. I am in a quandary. The photos are quite good. The subjects are also quite interesting, but they do seem to be posed. How does one judge it? Quality of photos is sterling. But the subjects are posing and not being themselves in the majority of said photos. Should that work against the quality/value of the book? It was interesting. I would like to visit. What to do? Certainly worth a look see as the subjects are interesting and the photos are first rate.
